COUNT, NONCOUNT NOUNS WITH ARTICLES

MAKE COUNTABLE

Uncountable nouns are often names of materials or of groups of things. You can use a piece of to refer to an example or a part of these uncountable nouns: a piece of paper / plastic / clothing / jewellery / furniture / music / equipment / information / software / advice / evidence.

- Can I give you a piece of advice? When you buy a new piece of equipment, check the warranty.

With some uncountable nouns, you need to use a different countable noun to refer to an example or a part: travel - trip; cash - coin or bill; feedback - comment; luggage - bag; work - job or position.

- My job includes a lot of international travel. I go on nine or ten business trips a year.
- My boss's feedback is very valuable. Her comments are always useful.

MORE ABOUT UNCOUNTABLE NOUNS

Academic subjects and sports that end in -s are usually singular: economics, genetics, mathematics, physics, politics; aerobics, gymnastics. News also takes a singular verb.

- Physics was my favorite subject in high school.
- The news isn't good, I'm afraid.

Some nouns are both countable and uncountable but they have different meanings, e.g. business, competition, experience, paper, time, work.

- My mother has always worked in business. She has owned several businesses.
- I have a lot of experience using dangerous equipment. I've had some scary experiences.
